

Alessandra Petrucci, Rector of the University of Florence, is full professor of Social Statistics and Ph.D. in Applied Statistics. She has been head of the Department of Statistics, Computer Science, and Applications and member of the Academic Senate and of the Board of directors of the University of Florence. Her research interests include survey sampling methods, spatial statistics, multivariate statistical analysis applied to social and environmental issues. She is member of the Italian National University Council (CUN). She is elected member of International Statistical Institute (ISI) and she is fellow of the Italian Statistical Society (SIS).